A Plot Exposed.

The proposal to take out of the hands power in the hands of the Executive Committee of the Parker Club or the Hearst Club or any other sort of club is insolent and it is offensive to every independent and right thinking Democrat, and it will not be tolerated,

Why should the voters of Richmond delegate to the Executive Committee of a political club a function which they can so easily exercise directly? The plan is unreasonable on its face, and the conclusion is irresistible that it is a well laid plot to place Richmond's sixty-one delegates to the State convention under the control and direction of a handful of local politicians for purposes of their own, and we strongly suspect that one of these purposes is to defeat or hamper the general primary election plan, We have an idea, too, that there are other hidden and selfish objects in view-to accomplish by indirection what could not be accomplished by popular vote.

Be that as it may, the plan is as suspicious as a wheel of fortune at a county fair, and the Democrats of Richmond will not have it,

Let us have a primary to select delegates and let the people vote directly for the candidates, and let all voters who favor the primary plan be sure that the candidates for whom they vote are primary election men at heart.

If there is a plot it has been exposed and Democrats know very well what to Virginia Chivalry.

The action of the cadets of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute in driving away two of their fellows who insulted women has attracted the attention of the Boston Transcript, which says that whether it was southern chivalry or American decency that inspired the boys to take this summary action they have earned the gratitude of every respectable person in the country, "Most of all," adds the Transcript, "is it to their credit that though the school authorities knew nodid not even suggest action, the boys were orderly and dignified in their dealand with proper military decorum publicly disgraced the culprits by stripping their uniforms of all tokens of rank before the paraded battalion, These are signs of moral health. Would that they appeared oftener and in like manner in the streets and public places of our large cities-and even in that society which considers itself most decorous."

It was, indeed, a noble act and worthy of commendation. The Times-Dispatch made the incident the subject of the leading editorial at the time, and 'we are gratifled that a distinguished New England newspaper takes the same view The act was in one sense a species of lawlessness and we should not have been surprised if this New England news paper had denounced it as such. The boys took measures into their own hands and acted without authority, but so far from denouncing or condemning or rebuking it, our New England contem porary actually glories in the fact that the boys did do this thing of their own accord without the knowledge of the officers of the institution. The boys acted under the higher law of decency and chivalry, and they set an example worthy of imitation. The honor system prevails in all the institutions of the South and that is a sufficient reason why southerners should educate their boys in southern schools.

These are what we call "natural mo nopolies." It is possible to give a better service when one company is in control of such utilities, and It is fair to say that the Richmond public are being well served, both by the street car monopoly and the telephone monopoly. The street car lines run into all parts of the city and surrounding country, comfortable cars are provided, the Main Street cars being among the best in the country, the schedules are well maintained and the

The meeting at the Jefferson Hotel last night of the Civic Improvement League was inspirational and full of promise. It was attended by a large number of representative men and women, so large, irdeed, that the parlor could not contain the crowd.
